Creating a diversified portfolio: Go for a blend of active & passive large-cap funds for optimal returns

As the benchmark indices surge to all-time highs, investors seeking large-cap allocation in their portfolios may want to stick solely to index funds. While index investing is an attractive option for large-cap exposure, investors must consider a blend of active and passive funds now for optimal returns. In fact, a recent report by S&P Indices Versus Active Funds (SPIVA) India Scorecard shows that half of actively managed large-cap funds have underperformed the benchmark S&P BSE 100 last year. The underperformance rates were significantly high over the three and five-year periods. However, experts say by carefully selecting a blend of funds, investors will achieve better returns, even with a 30-40% overlap in the portfolio.

B2B enterprise tech VC Cornerstone Ventures launches $200 million second fund

B2B enterprise technology venture capital firm Cornerstone Ventures on Wednesday announced the launch of its second fund with a target size of $200 million including a green-shoe option. The firm said the new fund will focus on emerging B2B tech startups across software platforms and marketplaces in different sectors including financial services & insurance, retail, consumer goods & e-commerce, distribution & supply chain, healthcare products & services, and sector-agnostic core technology innovations. The new fund will aim at companies in their early growth stages and will support startups in accessing a large enterprise customer ecosystem, strategic funding from next-round investors and also a large network of mentors and go-to-market partners.

Fundraising in new market environment: ‘Founders should be prepared for deeper diligence periods’

Capital allocation across the global venture ecosystem has become increasingly selective. The Indian private financing market, coming off the highs of 2020-21, continues to be active and rewarding for quality companies with excellent execution and sustainable financial performance. Investors are looking at backing transformative companies that can demonstrate profitable scalability. “Growth at all costs” is a theme that has been left behind. Founders must understand this reality to maximise their chances of a successful fundraise. Founders are best advised to take a targeted approach to fundraising in the current environment. We recommend our founders draw up a list of investors who are interested in the sector and ask if they are the right bet for the stage the company is in currently. Building a strong investment case and positioning vs peers is extremely important. It is critical to be specific and nuanced on the size and use of proceeds for the planned fundraise.
