Very informative talk...almost daily there're fraudulent mails, texts, etc popping in and it's really very difficult at times to know it's reliable source unless we click on 'Reply' (if it's an email) and click the senders ID to verify. But I wonder as to how many would be really knowing the phishing mails as you rightly stated!

Fraudsters hv now started calling using the country code of India followed by identical mobile numbers or landline numbers with STD codes (e.g.- 022, 011). Unlike Android, iPhone doesn't pop up Truecaller. Many times I need to copy paste the number on TC and find out. Any advise on such fraudulent Indian numbers?

- Gaanyesh K I guess it's a high time that people need to delete unwanted Apps on their devices as one of the precautionary measures. Like · Reply · Pin · 3m
- Gaanyesh K Last Question: in case if the phone gets cloned due to our mistakenly clicking on some link or returning the phishing call (Indian number); how would one know it? And what immediate steps one should take w.r.t. the device? Like · Reply · Pin · 1m
